Legal and Public Policy Community Service and Service Learning Listing

The Community Law Project would like to provide you with this community service and service learning listing to encourage students interested in Law and Public Policy careers to gain experiences in the field and to better determine their areas of interest within law. Public service lawyers are typically found in settings ranging from governmental agencies to civic organizations and charities, policy centers, law schools, and both large and small firms. The work of public service lawyers encompasses a broad spectrum of law related skills from oral advocacy to lobbying, client intake to educating the public. Internships and community service positions with public interest law organizations can offer students the opportunity to gain valuable experience and contacts within the legal community, as well as preparation for future career choices. It is for this reason, that we encourage all pre-professional Law and Public Policy students to consider participation in one of these programs listed below. Please contact Regina Serrano, Director Community Law Project at (858) 822-4972 or at rserrano@ucsd.edu to arrange a time to discuss these and other CLP opportunities.
